Celebrities Going Off About The Illuminati On Video

If you listen to conspiracy theorists, illuminati celebrity membership is at an all-time high. Nobody famous, be they a musician, an actor, a comic, or a business mogul, makes it in Hollywood without significant sacrifices made to the mysterious dark cabal that dominates banking and media. And, as seen in these celebrity Illuminati videos those Illuminati members love to taunt us by putting their symbols, hand gestures, and coded language in plain sight for all of us to gawk at. The message from celebrities in the Illuminati is clear: you might know our secret, but there's nothing you can do about it. Insert evil laugh here.

But sometimes, the mask of control slips off and someone says something about the Illuminati that they aren't supposed to. Because for a secret society, the Illuminati is remarkably well known and discussed in detail on the internet, particularly in videos on YouTube. Here are 10 celebrities speaking out about the Illuminati.

Note that not all of these videos actually mention the Illuminati by name, but don't be fooled. Whether discussing the government, the CIA, the "star whackers" killing

The star of "Chappelle's Show" is long known to be a proponent of conspiracy theories and secret societies being in control of the entertainment industry. This video gives us Chappelle pontificating on several conspiracy-related topics, including John Kerry's membership in the secretive Skull and Bones society.

Tila Tequila

Photo: YouTube

The reality star and model has spent much of her recent career talking about her many run-ins with the secret power players who control the entertainment industry. In this straight-to-the-camera ramble, Tequila talks about “exposing truths” and “releasing secret documents” of those who will eliminate her for speaking out. And what does she want to speak out about? Haters, of course! The ones that work for the government and the CIA, specifically. Apparently, our tax dollars are being used to build Tila hate sites, block comments from her supporters, and pay for “CIA dronebots” that are ruining her life.

But don’t worry, she’s going to post proof on her website to debunk the false claims “they” are making. So when the Great Purge of Tila Tequila fans comes, don't say you weren't warned.

Randy Quaid

Facing numerous charges against him, including failure to pay a $10,000 hotel bill, actor Randy Quaid went on the offense, embarking on a quest to expose the "star whackers" who were methodically offing his friends.

Quaid didn't fear for his life - he feared for something even more precious: his money. His fortune was being ransacked from him by lawyers and agents, so he believed, and his only way to fight back was to push this dark cabalf into the light - lest he be discredited even further.

Prince

When not bathing in the purple rain or making houses quake, the Purple One had quite the conspiratorial side. Witness this halting interview with Tavis Smiley, in which he talks about the "phenomenon" of chemtrails, another name for the lines in the sky made by hot exhaust from a jet engine hitting cold air. Some believe these trails are chemical agents sprayed by the Illuminati in order to depopulate the planet. In the video, Prince claims chemtrails made people "fight and argue" when he was a kid.

Prince goes on to explain how everything he knew about history is wrong and that we're all actually indentured servants. A baffled Smiley wisely steers the conversation back to promoting Prince's new album.

John Lennon

John spends this 1968 interview going on at length about the "insane people" running the world, the evils of advertising, and how it's useless to rail against the government when we're the ones who elect the government. He also mentions that he's "liable to be put away as insane" for expressing such a thing.

Was he simply expressing his frustration at the state of things, or secretly exposing the evil global controllers' plans to harass him into submission? Note that the FBI did attempt to get Lennon deported from the US, and that his life was tragically ended by an assassin. Such things have been known to happen to those who cross the Illuminati.

Ice Cube

Another artist who, when asked about the Illuminati, declares he has nothing to do with them or their world-dominating shenanigans. You see, Ice Cube isn't down with secret societies, because they're "up to no good" and they know what he stands for, so they leave him alone.

But if Justin Bieber is smart enough not to publicly declare he's a member of the Illuminati, certainly one of the founding members of NWA would be as well. Being mysteriously taken out by the dark cabal for admitting their existence would, indeed, not be a good day.

Russell Simmons

The music and media mogul is asked about Beyonce's supposed membership in the Illuminati, and like any good secret society shill, he goes out of his way not only to deny it, but to express his outrage over the question. Simmons also jokes that he "gets down with the devil every six years" to ensure his fame and success will continue.

Is he expressing his frustration at the insinuation that a powerful African American woman must be in league with the Powers That Be to achieve world fame and success? Or is he dropping hints about who he really is?

Jessie J

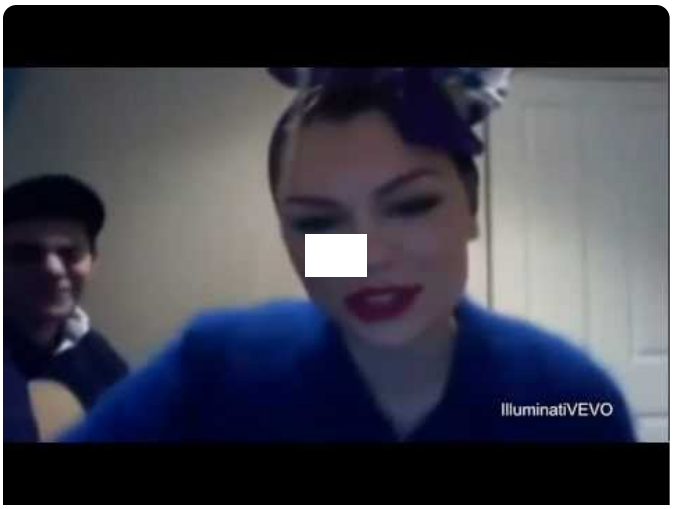

Photo: YouTube

The up-and-coming British pop star recorded a message to her fans refuting rumors that a hand signal she made in one of her videos was actually a subliminal admission of her Illuminati membership. She makes it clear she knows nothing about it, doesn't have time to be in it, and that "secret societies" are too well known to actually be secret.

Of course, this is exactly what someone new to the Illuminati would say if they were eager to make a good impression on the society leaders. After all, that's how celebrities become famous, and the wealthy become rich. So is she really not a member or trying to throw us off the trail of her membership to get in the good graces of the Powers That Be?

Only they know for sure.

Kanye West

Many rappers are believed to be members of the Illuminati, and some of them stoke the fire of conspiracy rumors by dropping Illuminati references in their lyrics. So if Jay-Z is a charter member of the cabal, it stands to reason that his one-time protegee and tour mate Kanye West would be as well. But Kanye claims in this radio interview (starting at :57) that while it's a "sexy word" that sounds like a cologne, when he's creating music, only God is on his mind. If you're sensing a theme with these videos, it's "celebrities deny that they're in the Illuminati."

Which, of course, is exactly what someone in the Illuminati would do.

Robbie Williams

British pop singer Robbie Williams had a childhood fascination with conspiracy theories that has carried over to his professional life. So when he says in this interview with a Dutch radio station that he's always been interested in the Illuminati, the secretive rituals of Bohemian Grove, and the notion that 9/11 might have been an inside job, is he simply carrying this interest to its natural end point?

Or is he providing free advertising for his Illuminati controllers? He makes it clear that it all might be rubbish put forth by crackpots, but it's also possible he was sent out to spew disinformation and throw us off the trail of who's really running things.
